St. Louis, April, 1862. DEAREST ALICIA:-I have comparatively little news to give you. There is little or no improvement in the style of bonnets .-We wear old ones, retrimmed with red and had so many calls upon our purses that we cannot afford anything new.

First, there was that person last summer who solicited contributions for the widow of that hero-Jackson. He received quite an amount with which I understand he has gone to Europe, to assist Mr. Slidell.

Then we had to purchase so much clothing for our friends. The poor fellows from | mencing on the 23-1 of July. Pea Ridge were quite needy—(I wish you could have seen them. They were perfect specimens of Southern chivalry. Their erect, dignified bearing in distress proved had clean linen for months. Just think of

We have been buisily engaged in sending delicacies to them. We have great difficulty in seeing the poor fellows, but we have referred the entire matter to a committee consisting of Miss Foxey, Mrs. Beau, and Miss Beauty. Miss Foxey talks so sweetly about religion. You recollect the interview she had with Governor Jackson; she spoke so feelingly about our troubles, that he promised that the entire national difficulties should be referred for settlement to a committee of ladies, of which she should be one. Was not that kind? But it was not done, for the dear Governor received and accepted a pressing invitation to wisit the Varieties Theater in New Orleans, on that vessel resigned, those two kept contact the vessel resigned in the vessel resigned in the vessel resigned. and he left to fulfil it, and you know a Confederate never, NEVER breaks his work.

She has no friends in the prison, but she wants to see that they are until other vessels and reinforcements arwell supplied with religious books, that is all, and she generally gets a pass for her- Captain Berryman sickened and died, and self and two friends.

Mrs. Beau sends all sorts of delicacies to the officers, and then calls herself. She commences by deploring the war. "No one regrets it more than she does," She generally takes her erochet work, and knits and talks until the pass for herself and three friends is given her.

Miss Beauty does not say much—she looks. She asks for a pass for herself and two friends, and for her mother's servant, who wishes to know if her cousin is doing well. Capture of Fredericksburg. Information was received by the citizens of Fredericksburg, Virginia, at four o'clock on Thursday afternoon, that the enemy was approaching through Stafford county, and the fact was at once communicated to our pickets and to Col. Lee's cavalry; but expressive of his opinions on the subject. it seems that the latter previously had an intimation of the advance, and at once fell and we feel certain that his wing of the back, burning the three bridges across the Rappahanuock connecting Fredericksburg These bridges, as many of our readers are usually.

Yesterday morning, at an early hour, the but there being no response the firing soon the census books: ceased. Meanwhile the three steamers, the St. Nicholas, the Virginia, and the Eureka, and some thirty sail vessels, lying at the wharf loaded with grain, with a considerable quantity of cotton piled near the depot, were set on fire by our men and destroyed. The troops that were in and near the place-very few in number and utterly inadequate to make a defence against a considerable force—evacuated Fredericksburg after having performed the duties required of them. Many of the citizens also left, abandoning their property to the "tender mercies" of the enemy.

Our latest advices inform us that the Common Council of Fredericksburg held a meeting yesterday and agreed to surrender the place, there being no means of defence. The train that left Richmond yesterday morning was stopped this side of Fredericksburg by a railroad agent. A regiment of troops was stationed some seven miles from the place, and the sick in camp were placed on board the train. All the men retired in safety.

The enemy can easily occupy the town of Fredericksburg, if he has not already done so; but an advance to Richmond from that direction is probably not contempla-ted. The obstructions would not be easily

Little importance is attached to the occupation of Fredericksburg, as it was an event anticipated when the army of the Potomac was withdrawn: There is nothing in the fact of the occupation to excite any alarm, or to create the expectation that the enemy will advance any great distance into the interior. He will perhaps remain where he has found a lodgment for some time to come, unless our forces succeed at an early day in driving him back beyond
